[Speech by Brunei Sult

 State Banquet honoring visiting Philippines President Corazon
 Aquino in Bandar Seri Begawan -- live or recorded]

[Text] Bismillahi'rahmani'rrahim [Peace be upon you
 --FBIS]! Your excellency! The Government and the people of Brunei Darussalam are indeed honored that despite your heavy schedule of duties at home, your excellency has responded to the ot invitation to visit Brunei. On my own behalf and on behalf of my government and the people of Brunei Darussalam, I wish to extend a warm welcome to your excellency and your delegation.

Our two countries have had a long historical rel will further enha understanding that have been nurtured between us. We have always felt that this bond of friendship has contributed to the expansion of cooperation beneficial to both our countries. Your visit is proof of your sincere desire to further strengthen the already existing close and cordial ties between our two countries and peoples. Since the mid-50's, many nationals of the Philippines have come to this country to work as doctors, engineers, teachers, and nurses, and that played a part in Brunei's early development efforts. The process of the formalization of our countries' long relationship culminated in the establishment of diplomatic relations in 1984. Our relations have since been strengthened in many ways, particularly through numerous contacts between our leaders and peoples.

I am also very pleased to note that communications between our two countries have been enhanced by regular Royal Brunei Airlines and Philippine Airline flights between Bandar Seri Begawan and Manila. A project that will link Brunei and the Philippines by means of a fiber-optic submarine cable is now underway. I am confident that when accomplished, this project will further improve telecommunications efficiency between our two countries.

Apart from our bilateral relations, our membership in ASEAN has enabled us to work very closely with one another. We share similar perceptions with the other member states of ASEAN on the importance of promoting and maintaining peace and stability in the region as well as on many global issues. I recall with a deep sense of satisfaction my visit to Manila for the meeting of ASEAN heads of government last year. The fact that the meeting was held in Manila attests to the importance of the Philippines to ASEAN and your excellency's skillful chairing of the Manila summit enabled it to produce meaningful results.

We are, however, conscious of the need for ASEAN to continue to work hard so that the decisions reached at the summit will be translated into reality. It is satisfying to note that there have been major encouraging developments in the international political environment creating a situation conducive to political settlement of outstanding regional problems. We hope this trend will create a precedent for a political solution of the Kampuchean problem. The most significant recent development was the holding of the Jakarta informal meeting, which we believe was a step forward in the search for a lasting political solution of the Kampuchean problem. In this context, ASEAN should intensify its efforts to help in the process of finding a solution acceptable to all the factions involved. A delay in the settlement of the Kampuchean issue would be an obstacle to the realization of the zone of peace, freedom, and neutrality which ASEAN seeks to achieve.

Your excellency, in conclusion, I would like to take this opportunity to express our admiration for the great courage and determination which you have shown in your efforts to bring about peace, stability, and prosperity for your people. We in Brunei wish you every success in your noble endeavor. Thank you!

[Applause]

TEXT:

[Speech by Philippine President Corazon C. Aquino at 29
August State Banquet held in honor of her visit by Sultan
Hassanal Bolkiah in Bandar Seri Begawan -- live or recorded]

[Text] Your Majesty Sultan Hassanal Bolkiah! Your majesty, your royal highness, members of the Cabinet! Ladies and gentlemen!

We are indeed honored to be the guests of one of Southeast Asia's oldest nations and most distinguished ruling families, a nation with which the Philippines has had long historic ties and deep racial and cultural affinities. The commonality of our colonial experiences in this part of the world further strengthens those ties and gives the mutual support that has marked our relations from the very start of Brunei's independence -- the quality of a special friendship.

As you well know, we welcomed the independence of Brunei and its inclusion in the United Nations and in ASEAN most eagerly. In turn, we found in Brunei and its royal family the understanding and willingness to help when we needed to address our country's problems and concerns in its southern part and borders. Brunei Darussalam's efforts at the OIC [Organization of Islamic Conference -- FBIS] meetings in Morocco in 1986 and in Jordan this year have been invaluable to our republic, particularly at this time when it is just starting to recover its proper strength and rightful place in the Southeast Asian balance -- a strength represented by its numbers, its growing economy, and its new-found pride and jealous sense of nationhood, a ranking that its strategic location, geographical safety, and past contributions to the stability and security of the entire region dictates it must have. That strength and rank cannot help but make themselves felt in the future configuration of the region's security.

Brunei's many acts of friendship toward the Philippines have come at the critical juncture of its history. Those who stood by us at this time will not be forgotten. We shall share our friends' concerns for their own country's security and stability in this part of the world as they have shared our problems with the regard to our own. Friendship will be a factor in our decision as we steer this region toward new avenues of greater peace, stability, safety, and genuine independence in Southeast Asia.

I have come here to strengthen the ties established by history and by generous acts extended to each other. I feel that this would be best accomplished by greater trade and cultural commerce between our countries so that the friendship we avow today will be manifest concretely in the material improvement of our respective peoples. The rich advantages of more extensive trade and investments between us have barely been tapped. Yet, trade should be natural, as they say, between two countries so closely situated and historically linked. The richness and variety of Philippine products and the importance of the mineral resources of Brunei Darussalam strongly suggest the direction of a meaningful and mutually beneficial partnership between these two young nations on the threshold of a new era in the world's history. For we stand indeed on such a threshold. As other regions of the world coalesce more tightly to achieve the strength that complementary economies have begun to generate in the formal and informal federations that are coming into being among the countries of Europe and North America, we must rethink the resolve that lies at the root of our ASEAN commitment and consider whether we should start earnestly to take its goals seriously or strike out each in his or her own independent direction to make partnerships elsewhere. The powers that transnational unity will generate in the coming federations of the North promise, on the one hand, greater stability and peace in the world but threaten, on the other, the emergence of combined economic forces that ASEAN countries cannot hope to compete against separately. The swift and much lauded progress that some of the ASEAN countries have achieved will prove quite facile united North. For time alone cannot erase the dichotomy and disparity between North and South. And, like it or not, we are of the South. We have in the South, God-given natural bounties, but equally and historically determined economic development, which has given us occasional prosperity and boom, notwithstanding, only the most tentative economic foundation. The challenge of sovereign combinations in the West yet suggests its own solution. The future beckons us to greater cooperation and closer unity of action and purpose. Perhaps, it is too much to expect this among so many, but it is not unreasonable to hope that we can make a meaningful start between two, between Negara Brunei Darussalam [State of Brunei Darussalam -- FBIS] and the Republic of the Philippines.

On behalf of our government and the Filipino people, I pledge to Your Majesty and the people of Brunei Darussalam our best efforts to bring about the deeper cooperation and unity in the generous spirit that from the start has marked our diplomatic friendship and historic ties. Thank you! [Applause]
